MARBLE SERIES

The best thing about engineered quartz countertops as they are made of 90% to 95% natural quartz crystal with 6% to 10% (common content) resins and pigments that are combined to imperishable and dense slabs.

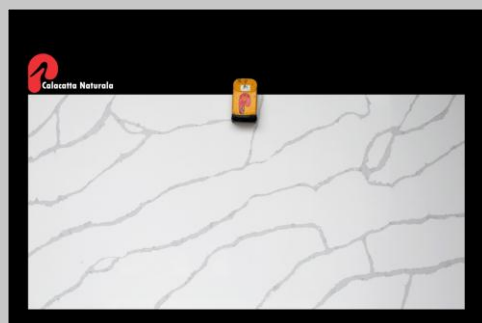

Granite is prone to damage as it can retain stains from cooking oils and grease very easily because of its porous structure which gives it the property of absorbing the liquid.

Quartz offer almost all the benefits of natural stone, but are free from virtually all the drawbacks and the resins also help make these counters stain and scratch resistant and nonporous. In addition to this granite one can also easily get etched by the acids present in regular household items. Engineered quartz countertops are a better option as compared to granite as it doesn't have any of such shortcomings.
